Mrs. Ball almost invariably introduces some pretty and novel feature into whatever form of entertainment she provides for her guests and this occasion did not lack them. In the dressing rooms of the ladies and gentlemen were placed large bowls of flowers in which no two sprays were of the same variety. Each guest chose a blossom and on descending to the parlor, the gentleman sought his partner, whom he distinguished by the flower she wore and which matched his own. The tables also were designated in this fashion, each being decorated with a distinguishing blossom, whether of roses, carnations, peonles, heliotrope or of various other kinds.

The score cards were perforated with small holes about the edge and a dainty basket of tiny bells with bits of gay ribbon was provided. Each winner of a game was privileged to tie a bell to his tally card by means of a ribbon, and when the prizes were awarded the winners were able to rejeice with a miniature tintinnabulation of bells. The light refreshments included orange ice, a frozen eggnong bearing the seductive name of "Lalla Rookh," and tny cakes in green and white, violet and white, pink and white and other dainty colors.
